Lace AI – Product Marketing Manager

Katya,

Lace describes itself five different ways on its own pages. The homepage says "The AI Revenue System for the Trades," the page title says "Revenue automation for Call Centers," and the careers pages say "AI Customer Engagement Platform." Avoca and Sameday both say "AI front office," and Avoca is now valued at $1B. An owner comparing vendors remembers one clear name more easily than five good ones. Picking that name, and giving sales what it needs against Avoca, is where I'd start.

I've been the first marketer in the room more than once, and I usually end up writing down the story everyone else carries in their heads. At Reform, I moved a general form builder into a lead conversion story, and trial activation rose 34%. The competitor pages I built there against Typeform and Jotform, two larger form builders, brought 19% more leads that were ready to decide.

I've also written for buyers like yours. At Bento Africa, a payroll and HR software company, lead scoring and nurture by segment lifted sales qualified leads 50%. Through my company, Marketing In Action, I build customer acquisition offers for US local-service businesses, including HVAC and home care, so I know how an owner reads a pitch.

I wrote up how I'd start. It lists the five names with links and proposes one to test: "the AI call center for the trades." That name covers both the AI agents and the coaching of the human team. It also has a battlecard against Avoca, and every claim that needs your deal data is marked.

I live in Lagos, Nigeria, and I'm open to working as a contractor or through an Employer of Record (EOR). I can start within two weeks.

I'd like to hear which rival your reps meet most often.
