Flex – Senior Product Marketing Manager

Flex is building its first product marketing function four years and eight product lines in, and building that function from nothing is the work I've done most often. A recurring pattern in my career is being handed something ambiguous and asked to turn it into a system other people can run.

At Bujeti (Y Combinator W23), a spend and expense management platform sold to finance teams, I built the growth and product marketing function from scratch and generated 1,331 qualified leads in six months. That is the same buyer and the same competitive set this role is being asked to own. At Reform I repositioned a form builder into a conversion product and trial activation rose 34%.

Before I ran marketing, I carried a number. I started as Sales Manager at Cecure Intelligence Limited and moved through Head of Growth and Marketing to Chief Revenue Officer. I have sat on the call where a prospect says the competitor's name and there is nothing written down to say back. That is why I build enablement the way I do.

I wrote a first draft of the competitive positioning brief, with battlecards for Ramp, Brex and Bill.com: https://jamespraise.xyz/work/flex/proof/. It opens on something I could not reconcile from the outside. In March, Jared Thomas published "We Don't Sell Credit Here" and said Flex is not up against Brex, Ramp or Bill.com. This role is asked to own positioning against exactly those three. A rep on a live call has to guess which one applies.

I'm based in Lagos and work US hours, which is how I've run every engagement for the past several years. I know the posting is tagged for the US, and I'd rather name that than leave it unspoken.

James