Leadfeeder – Demand Generation Manager

Hi Jamie,

What stood out in your job description is how narrowly it defines the role: the compounding loop between content, community, and distribution, with Paid and SEO owned elsewhere and content production treated as the output, not the goal. That's a different hire than most demand gen postings mean.

I've run that loop myself: I founded Marketing In Action from zero, a community, academy, and newsletter that compounds through the same content-to-word-of-mouth mechanic you're describing. On the PLG side specifically, I rebuilt Reform's (a form-builder SaaS product) go-to-market and funnel at FunnelEnvy, a 48% increase in non-branded organic traffic and a 34% uplift in trial activation.

While researching Leadfeeder, I found something worth building on rather than pitching cold. Your team documented, in a case study on LearnUpon's own site, that Leadfeeder Academy's certification and social-sharing mechanic was "turning education into a demand generation channel." That loop isn't visible anywhere on the current public site, no certificates, no badges, no share prompts on the Academy pages I checked. Given the 2022 Echobot merger and two rebrand cycles since, that's exactly the kind of proven asset that gets orphaned, not because it stopped working, but because nobody's owned reviving it. I'd want to be the one who does.

One thing to flag directly: I'm based in Lagos, not the EU. I saw in the comments you've got team members outside the EU too, so I wanted to put my hat in rather than assume it's a hard no.

I put together a concept for relaunching that certification loop as an active demand-gen channel.

James
