Matik – Sr. Demand Generation Manager

I read Nikola's post about customer segments this week. Long-tail accounts want output that is almost entirely standardized, and dedicated enterprise accounts move toward a 70/30 split, with the last 30% coming from the rep. That split is a useful targeting rule for demand generation, because each end needs a different message, proof story and play for your sales development representatives (SDRs).

Then I looked at what sits behind the matik.ai release. Your webinar library has 11 on-demand sessions and none about the agents. The summit page shows four past summits and no next date. Asana's 8x business reviews and Okta's monthly value snapshots each live inside a separate blog post. So I wrote a 90-day plan that gives the launch a live Feedback Loops session, a two-tier account program run with your SDRs, one results page and the HubSpot handoff rules underneath. It's at jamespraise.xyz/work/matik/proof.

I have run this kind of program before. At FunnelEnvy, qualified enterprise leads grew 40% quarter over quarter, and the account-based program I built lifted enterprise meetings 31%. Agreeing lead definitions with sales raised the share of marketing leads that became sales qualified by 28%, and I built the reporting on HubSpot and Looker Studio. At Reform, the competitor and integration pages I launched produced 19% more decision-stage leads. As Chief Revenue Officer at Cecure Intelligence, my team generated 1,646 marketing qualified leads, 629 demos and $3.4M in open deals.

I work remotely from Lagos and can cover Pacific mornings for launches, live sessions and SDR reviews.

I'm interested in your thoughts on the plan.
