SparkLoop – Full-Stack Marketer

You hired for this role through a Reform form. For two years I ran product marketing and the product-led funnel at Reform, and SparkLoop was one of our customers.

I have already done most of this job. At Reform I owned the funnel from signup to paid. I repositioned the product around lead conversion and rebuilt onboarding and lifecycle email, and trial activation rose 34% while trial-to-paid conversion rose 21%. I built the launch framework we used for every release, which lifted new feature adoption 26% within 90 days. I also set up Reform's partner program on PartnerStack from scratch.

I'm the customer you build for, too. I run Marketing In Action, a newsletter with 5,000+ subscribers at a 47% average open rate, and I earn affiliate income through PartnerStack links in it. When I signed up for SparkLoop to grow it, I stalled at onboarding. MIA is on Substack, and the referral tools needed an integration Substack didn't have. That's the first lifecycle fix I'd want to test: send publishers on an unsupported platform straight to paid recommendations so they still reach value.

I ship my own marketing sites with Claude Code and run a library of AI agent skills I built for research, drafting and reporting. That's how one person covers a launch, a case study and a paid test in the same week without the quality dropping.

I built one example for you: a Welcome Surveys case study page and the $10K campaign to launch it, at jamespraise.xyz/work/sparkloop. The operator in it is illustrative. The page, the angle tests and the budget are how I'd run the real one.
