The GIST – Integrated Marketing Manager (Freelance)

Building sponsorship proposals and running the RFP process under deadline describes work I've already done. At Cecure Intelligence Limited, I built revenue operations and partnerships with AWS, Google, and Microsoft across a five-country go-to-market, producing the sales and partnership materials behind $326K in sales velocity and $3.4M in open pipeline.

I also run my own media business. Marketing In Action is a newsletter and academy with 5,000+ subscribers, and I handle its sponsor and affiliate-partner program myself, writing the same kind of pitch materials a brand partner reads before saying yes. That's given me a buyer's-eye view of what actually makes a sponsorship proposal land.

I don't have sports-industry experience. What I do have is real, repeated practice building the decks, pricing, and packaging documents this role owns, work that transfers directly regardless of category.

The GIST's pitch to non-endemic brands, the ones that haven't historically bought into sports sponsorship, is a strong argument. I built a reusable, well-evidenced version of it, grounded in Jacie deHoop's own words on the subject, to show what that looks like in practice.
