Todoist — Growth Marketer

I run my own bootstrapped marketing business, so the idea that Todoist can't outspend its competitors and has to outthink them instead isn't a values statement to me. It's the budget I already work under every month.

I'm James, a demand generation and growth operator with 7+ years across B2B and SaaS companies in Africa, North America, and Europe. I've been the first or early marketing hire multiple times, and my work has contributed to over $10M in qualified pipeline and 4,000+ MQLs.

This role asks for two things most growth roles ask for separately: real, hands-on paid-channel ownership, and real partnership building. At Cecure Intelligence Limited, I ran paid acquisition at 2-3x return on ad spend on a genuinely constrained budget, $1.5K to $15K a month, while building partnerships with AWS, Google, and Microsoft that anchored a launch across five countries. At Hank Robotics, I personally activated Google Ads and LinkedIn Ads as part of a ground-up build that took MQLs from 1 to 11 in 90 days. And at Reform, a single well-matched partnership grew into 11% of new qualified pipeline for a bootstrapped product, without a formal affiliate program behind it first.

The AI-native part of the posting is the part that made me apply quickly rather than queue it up for later. I built my own end-to-end paid-acquisition measurement system, Tag Manager, server-side tracking, Meta's Conversions API, GA4, for my own business, and it caught a real cross-attribution error in my own Meta reporting before it wasted spend. I work inside Claude Code daily and have built 123 custom AI agent skills I use across my own marketing operations, 31 of them published publicly on GitHub.

I put together a tracking and attribution plan for a Ramble-specific paid push, so a click doesn't get credited for an upgrade it didn't cause.

Thank you for reading this.
