Arcanna.ai – Technical Product Marketing Manager

Arcanna needs one person to own positioning, content, and competitive intelligence at once, against competitors with a lot more capital. That is what I did at Reform after FunnelEnvy acquired it. I repositioned a general form builder into a category defined conversion product, alone, and trial activation rose 34 percent in the months after.

A pattern in my work: I build the systems I market instead of only writing about them. I have published 31 marketing AI agent skills publicly on GitHub, proof that I can take a genuinely technical mechanism and turn it into something other people actually pick up and use, the same translation your Decision Layer needs for CISOs and SOC leaders.

I have a habit of ramping fast into technical, regulated categories under real deadlines. I built compliance-aware go to market systems for a reproductive health platform operating across Nigeria, Rwanda, and Benin. At Cecure Intelligence, I marketed cloud solutions built with AWS, Google, and Microsoft to enterprise and startup buyers.

Arcanna is still turning "Decision Intelligence" into a name a buyer repeats without being prompted. I read every page where Arcanna names its own category, checked how Tines, Torq, Swimlane, and D3 Security name theirs, and tested what a security buyer gets back when they search the term cold. That is the specific fight I would want to help you win first.
