Dash0 – Senior Product Marketing Manager

I'm reaching out as someone who has spent the last several years building exactly the kind of product marketing systems a company mid-pivot needs to keep its story consistent while it ships fast.

My name is James. I'm a product marketing operator with 7+ years of hands-on experience across B2B and SaaS companies in Africa, North America, and Europe, often as the first or early marketing hire, building positioning and launch systems from scratch rather than maintaining ones someone else designed. Across that work, I've contributed to over $10M in qualified pipeline and supported more than 15 product launches.

I noticed something specific while researching Dash0. Mirko's "Beyond Observability" post in July laid out a real repositioning, closing the loop from code to production, Agent0 as an AI SRE, and it's propagated cleanly to the homepage, the blog, and the docs. But the 14 competitor-comparison pages, the exact pages a buyer reads when they're actively choosing between Dash0 and Datadog or Honeycomb, still describe Dash0 in language from before the pivot. Both the Datadog and Honeycomb pages lead with "built from the ground up on open standards" and "complete independence from vendor constraints," the pitch the post itself says is no longer sufficient alone. The strongest, newest differentiator Dash0 has isn't on the page built to win the exact decision it would help win.

That's the same move I made at Reform: I inherited a product with no clear post-acquisition market story, and the fix wasn't a new campaign, it was noticing which pages hadn't caught up to what the product had become and rewriting them with proof the company already had. Reform's repositioning drove a 34% lift in trial activation. At FunnelEnvy, I built agentic content-distribution infrastructure so a single piece of content threads consistently across ten-plus channels, the same discipline that would keep Dash0's comparison pages, changelog, and pricing copy telling one story instead of three timelines.

At Reform I marketed to a technical and business audience. I translated the product's real capability into a narrative a buyer understands, and I built the systems that keep that narrative consistent as the product moves fast. I also build and ship my own AI-native tooling daily (Claude Code, n8n, MCP-based automation), closer to the buyer Dash0 is selling to than most PMM backgrounds get.

I put together a short read on the comparison-page gap and where I'd start fixing it.

Thank you for taking the time to read this.

James

P.S. I've created a portfolio focused on this role at jamespraise.xyz/work/dash0.