Modash – VP of Marketing

Avery,

You wrote that people still mostly know Modash for search. I went looking for what a larger brand would find when it tries to learn more, and the gap shows up fast. The enterprise URL returns a 404, the Enterprise plan is described by creator count, and the customers page has quotes but no case studies with numbers. The product has moved well past search, with payments, affiliate programs, sales tracking and the Promoty acquisition. The story a bigger buyer reads hasn't moved with it yet.

That's the kind of problem I've worked on. At Reform, I repositioned a general form builder around lead conversion, and trial activation rose 34%. I then moved 72% of the legacy free users onto paid plans with a phased sunset, and ran a win-back program for cancelled subscribers. Most of the people it brought back were still paying three months later. Growing account value from an existing base is most of what you describe for the next stage.

I've led through other people too. At Cecure Intelligence, a B2B technology and training company, I went from Sales Manager to Chief Revenue Officer. I ran sales and marketing as one revenue team, with 1,646 marketing qualified leads and $3.4M in open deal value. At Bujeti, a Y Combinator spend management startup, I built the growth function across product marketing, lifecycle, SEO, events and partnerships. Today I run three paid-ads specialists at Marketing In Action through a documented review system.

I also know the creator side of your market. My newsletter has 5,000+ subscribers and sells sponsored product showcases to software companies, so I've been the creator a brand pays. At Reform I built the affiliate program on PartnerStack. That was the brand side of the same deal.

I live in Lagos, Nigeria, one hour behind Tallinn. I'm open to working as a contractor or through an Employer of Record (EOR), whichever suits Modash. I can start immediately.

I'd like to talk about where the Platform story goes next.

P.S. I wrote up how I'd tell the full-platform story to larger teams, including draft copy for an enterprise page: https://jamespraise.xyz/work/modash/
